

1. Can you lead a team even if you're not the "official" leader? How?

---

---

2. Think about a time you had an idea or a different opinion in a group but didn't share it. What held you back? What might have helped you speak up?

---

---

---

3. In a recent group project, did you tend to give more, take more, or try to match what others gave? How do you think changing that balance could help the team?

---

---

---

4. Everyone talks about listening, but what does it really look like to actively listen in a team, instead of just waiting to talk?

---

---

---

5. If a group project didn't go as planned, what was the most important thing you learned about working in a team from that experience?

---

---

---

6. If you were building your dream team for a big project, what are the top three qualities you'd want in your teammates?

---

---

---

7. How do you handle it when your team members have very different ideas from yours? Is it a good thing or a bad thing for the team?

---

---

---

8. Can you think of a time when you saw something that needed doing in a group and just did it, without being asked? What happened?
